Annex I
Description of Requirements

Context of the Requirement	People with drug use problems often face dehumanizing discriminatory manners and encounter health-care systems that are reluctant to provide services to them.<sup>1</sup> Stigma against women with drug use problems starts from within the family resulting early loss of their social and family support. Moreover, women with addiction often internalise this external stigma reproaching themselves giving way to negative self-perceptions further deterring their referral to harm reduction and health care services and impacts the self-efficacy of these women even more negatively.<sup>2</sup> Besides the massive problem of drug use the national response in Iran has been vast in terms of establishing treatment and harm reduction services. According to latest reports of the DCHQ on Drug Control in Iran there are over 7,000 treatment centres providing various treatment modalities in outpatient and residential settings in the country to about 1,000,000 of people seeking drug use treatment. Moreover ca. 100,000 people with drug use disorders are receiving harm reduction services throughout the country. These statistics are not disaggregated by sex and so the number of women receiving treatment and harm reduction services is not known well. Such women-only drug harm reduction and treatment centres have been established in the country since 2000's. Still factors influencing service utilization need to be addressed and barriers to access of services need to be eliminated to ensure proper effectiveness of the services<sup>3</sup>. Many studies conducted in the country appraise that women with drug use disorders are underrepresented among clients referring to treatment and harm reduction services. The same studies attribute the underutilization of these services to: the high levels of stigma and discrimination, the complexity of life situations of the women involved in drug use and required psychosocial and motivational interventions and the lack of responsiveness of

IRN/Z78 - “Drug Use Prevention, Treatment, Rehabilitation, and HIV Care”

Conduct a rapid needs assessment on the needs of women who use drugs on treatment and rehabilitation of drug use disorders - Phase I

Background and Context

Iran is heavily affected by the problem of drug use, with one of the highest rates of opiate use in the world<sup>7</sup> and a significant prevalence of Amphetamine -Type Stimulants (ATS) use. A household epidemiological survey in the country conducted in 2015 estimates the life-time prevalence of drug use among the women aged 15-64 years at about 1.5% and the Iranian Drug Control Headquarters (DCHQ) has estimated that women comprise about 10% of people who use drugs in the country. While no disaggregated statistics are documented, the Director General of the Treatment and Social Support of the DCHQ has estimated the number of women with current drug use disorders in Iran around 156,000 in his interviews with the press. Women to men ratio in use of stimulants seems to be higher than in the use of opiates. [e.g. <sup>8</sup>]

People with drug use problems often face dehumanizing discriminatory manners and encounter health-care systems that are reluctant to provide services to them.<sup>9</sup> Stigma against women with drug use problems starts from within the family resulting early loss of their social and family support. Moreover, women with addiction often internalise this external stigma reproaching themselves giving way to negative self-perceptions further deterring their referral to harm reduction and health care services and impacts the self-efficacy of these women even more negatively.<sup>10</sup>

Besides the massive problem of drug use the national response in Iran has been vast in terms of establishing treatment and harm reduction services. According to latest reports of the DCHQ on Drug Control in Iran there are over 7,000 treatment centres providing various treatment modalities in outpatient and residential settings in the country to about 1,000,000 of people seeking drug use treatment. Moreover ca. 100,000 people with drug use disorders are receiving harm reduction services throughout the country. These statistics are not disaggregated by sex and so the number of women receiving treatment and harm reduction services is not known well. Such women-only drug harm reduction and treatment centres have been established in the country since 2000's. Still factors influencing service utilization need to be addressed and barriers to access of services need to be eliminated to ensure proper effectiveness of the services <sup>11</sup>. Many studies conducted in the country appraise that women with drug use disorders are underrepresented among clients referring to treatment and harm reduction services. The same studies attribute the underutilisation of these services to: the high levels of stigma and discrimination, the complexity of life situations of the women involved in drug use and required psychosocial and motivational interventions and the lack of responsiveness of the services to the special needs of these women in the first place.<sup>12</sup>

The global literature shows extensive evidence of the differences between women and men regarding substance use. Studies show that women who start using drugs are more susceptible to develop an addiction. Women are also more vulnerable to drug-related pathologies and are more exposed to sexual and physical abuse and violence and to sexually transmitted infections like HIV. The percentage of women in addiction treatment is very low. Women often encounter various personal, social, cultural, and structural barriers to entering treatment, such as a lack of treatment for pregnant women, low level of education, psychiatric disorders, history of trauma, stigma, discrimination, shame, poverty, child care duties, low social support, lack of services in accordance with women's needs, high treatment cost, and rigid treatment schedules.

The most evident fact in the area of drug use among women in Iran and its treatment is that reliable statistics are not available. Moreover, information on existing and current services are scarce. The DCHQ Drug Control Report 2014 lists all 75 women-only drug treatment and harm reduction centres operational in the country comprising of: 10 counselling centres, 11 night shelters (for homeless women who use drugs), 17 harm reduction drop-in Centres and 37 Short-term Residential drug treatment centres. Since then additional centres have been established, but their full list is not available. Much less is known about quality aspects and coverage of their services. Several studies in the area of women and drug use have concluded that women with drug use problems do not access existing services because they are not user-friendly and not tailored to their needs. The present activity envisages assessing existing services together with unmet needs of women with drug use disorders.

The present activity is funded graciously by the Kingdom of Norway under the IRN/Z78 project. It aims contributing to collection of necessary information on the characteristics and needs of women who use drugs for entering treatment programmes and continue treatment and recovery. The first phase shall cover the two provinces of Tehran and Alborz with additional provinces to follow in the second phase.
